New Postmaster.

Mr. L. G. Randall has been selected as Postmaster to succeed Mr. Foulke, who has resigned. Mr. R. will take the office immediately, and no doubt will make an excellent official. We congratulate him upon his appointment. He received the appointment over Wm. H. Brownell and D. M. Jones, all good Republicans, but Capt. Randall had worked long and hard for his party and it was upon this ground no doubt that gave him the ascendancy. Mr. Foulke has held the office creditably for the past five or six years, and leaves it on account of poor health. He will devote his time to his newspaper in the future.

County Fair.

A correspondent from Liberty writes: Mr. Enright—I have waited until discouraged to hear something in regard to holding an agricultural fair in Henry county. Why can't the ball be set rolling? I hope that some one acquainted with the subject will take up the matter and discuss it for all there is in it. Other counties have fairs and it is a great pity that Henry county is so behind the times. Now I propose that if nothing is to be done toward organizing a county fair association, that Fulton county take that part of our county which lies north of the river, and Harrison township take that south of the river. Let us organize a county society, and instead of letting other counties take the loose change out of our boys and girls let us keep it at home. Who will move in the matter?

It has been developed through the census reports that no lumbering cheese has been imported into this country since the war, and that most of the article of commerce sold as such now is from the dairy products of 1812 and still earlier. The thermometer got down to 25 degrees below zero Friday morning last in Napoleon. The coldest day of the season.

Mr. A. F. Raderfory, of this pt., sends us the following, dated Jan. 25, 1884:

Mr. Editor:—The thermometer indicated 25 degrees below zero this morning. This is the coldest morning, if I recollect right, since January 1, 1883.

Right well do we remember the cold day in 1883, for upon that day we had the pleasure (?) of distributing a Carrier's Address to the patrons of the old Seneca Advertiser, being then an apprentice in that office.

Godey's Lady's Book for February is a veritable valentine, being the most beautiful number ever published of this magazine. Its steel engravings, colored plates, and other illustrations are truly handsome. Its literature, we notice, is being increased in quantity as well as improved in quality. The opening poem "Sub Rosa, a Valentine," by Mrs. de Buba, is rendered very attractive by its pretty border. "Tam," by Mrs. Ella Rodman Church, increases in interest, and the second installment promises well for a good story. "A Stray Valentine" and "Only a Priorese," both valentine stories, "Quarantined in New York Harbor," and the new "Arm Braid" are all good. Taken all in all, the February number is very interesting, well worthy the attention of the ladies. Especially so as it is the only Magazine that allows its readers the selection of a full-sized cut Paper Pattern of their own choice from any fashion illustrated in the Magazine.

STILL ANOTHER HORRIBLE ACCIDENT.

Cremation of a Young Man.

On Friday last Coroner Cloud received information that a man had been burned to death in the woods near Elery. Upon repairing to the place the Coroner found that on the night before a young man, named Squire C. Edwards, about 19 years of age, had been burned up, together with his shanty, in the woods about a quarter of a mile from Elery.

It was the intention of young Edwards and his brother to chop wood in the vicinity, and for that purpose had built a shanty in the woods, which they had just completed, and Thursday night was the first time it was occupied, Squire occupying the shanty alone. Friday morning the brother visited the place ready to go to work, and to his horror found nothing but the smoldering embers of the shanty and the charred remains of his brother among the ruins.

The body was horribly burned, and nothing remained but the trunk. The Coroner held an inquest, and had Dr. Maerker examine the body, who found no wounds upon it, thus exploding the report that the young man had been murdered and his shanty set on fire.

The shanty contained a cook stove and a bunk, and it is surmised that fire was communicated to the building from the stove and young Edwards smothered by smoke before he could awake and make his escape.

The deceased was a young man well thought of, unmarried, and a son of Mr. Samuel Edwards, better known as the Ohio Hunter. The accident cast a deep gloom over the community in the vicinity of Elery.

Lost.

JANUARY 27th, 1884.

ED. NORTHEAST:—Would it not be a good idea to give us poor girls the names of the bachelors whom we are expected to make happy this leap year, as some of the Toledo papers are doing? By giving a few in your next issue, you will oblige a whole bevy of GIRLS.

So sorry, girls, but we cannot comply with your request. Once upon a time we were numbered among the bachelor class, therefore aware of the many snares and temptations those poor creatures are subject to during the days of leap year. For this reason our conscience forbids our giving a list of names, but to not wholly disappoint a "bevy of girls" we lay down a few suggestions or rules which may be of service in their crusade against the bachelors, as follows:

Take heed and don't love too many at once.

Don't spoon to excess, and above all, don't do your spooning in public.

Should you be fortunate enough to hook a sucker, settle the getting up and making the fire question first thing, it will relieve embarrassment in the future.

When your victim faintly says the dear word "yes," be careful how you smack him upon the mouth, for fear you "smell a mice," and upset the pleasure.

Give your brothers a little of the sweetness known as taffy, and hustle 'em off to bed before the "candidates" call—you know how.

Objection to tobacco should be stated in time, or you must hold your tongues forever after. No reasonable man will give up tobacco after marriage if he does not agree to before the "happy (?) event."

Don't hesitate to use your best endeavors to ascertain whether or not your intended can earn a decent living for a family of two. If he can, nail him on the spot.

Don't expect a man working for $8 a week to furnish you with reserved seats at every show. He can't do it and be honest.

You must deal gently, oh, so gently with bashful lovers. Entice them gradually, gracefully and smilingly to the given point. A bashful man is one of the most malleable of men, but he is generally good all through when you get acquainted with him, and will do to the top.

In selecting your victims have an eye to pleasing your granfathers, their sisters and their cousins and their aunts, for they will not live always, and may leave you enough dust to keep your leap-year husband ever after in peace and plenty.

FUN AND CANDY.—It is impossible to have more fun these long evenings than by making candy at home. You can learn how to make every kind of fine candy sold at the best confectionary stores in the cities, from that valuable book, "How to Make Candy." No home can afford to be without it.
